of Reviews of Important and Interesting New Publications.

In "Vampires," a newly published story by Julien Gordon (Lippincotts), a young man in robust health marries a sickly girl, and at the end of a few years dies of exhausted vitality, while she survives in splendid bloom and vigor. This is not a delicate plot, and not a plot which the jovial reader would be likely to pick out as calculated to delight and beguile; neither is the treatment which Julien Gordon bestows upon it subtle or powerful enough to move very effectually the emotions of the reader abominably or tremendously inclined. The character drawing with which the tale opens is clever and interesting, if somewhat pertinacious and largely irrelevant. It is much uperior in workmanship and in much better aste than the tale proper. Curiously enough. the more promising characters of the introduction are dropped as soon as the action of the story begins, and the reader is permitted to know nothing more of them, except that once he is assured that they are all pretty well.

There is one interloping character, a young soman who writes about society for the newspers, who excites our especial disapprobapapers, who excites our especial disapproba-tion. We trust she is not a photograph of any-body: if she is, it would have been more generous in the novelist to treat her with such art as should have left her vulgarity only suggestively and not absolutely and painfully apparent to us. Thackeray know how to apply such art. Mr. Foker is unmistakably vulgar, but he is not permitted to come before us with all the immoderate glare which doubtless distinguished the model in real life who stood for him. The most strenuous realist may not live up to his theory absolutely; even Mr. Howells knows better when he is telling stories, whatever he may insist upon when he is arranging a scheme for the perfection of fiction in his critical capacity. We are not quite sure whether, in Julien Gor don's meaning, the physical vigor of the husband was in large part directly absorbed by the vampire, his wife, or whether the vampirism consisted wholly in the drafts made upon his energy by the need to supply money for the luxurious support of the sickly spouse and of the mother-in-law as well. There is a vagueness about this part of the narrative which warrants the reader in guessing out that point for himself. "Mademoiselle Réséda," another of Julien Gordon's stories, which we have already noticed, appears with "Vampires" in this volume.
"A Woman of Shawmut," a romance of colonial times, by Edmund Janes Carpenter (Little, Brown & Co., Boston), tells of a Puritan maiden who broke her vows to her young lover, who was nobody in particular, in order to marry Richard Bellingham, Governor of the colony of Massachusetts Bay. She suffered for her perfidy, and so did the ;ilted man. The story is plainly told. It is prettily illustrated by Frank T. Merrill.

We note a single passage in Walter H. Mc-Dougall's novel, "The Hidden City" (Cassell Publishing Company). "Their lips," says Mr. McDougall, speaking of a pair of earnest young persons, "came together as two longparted mates, and mingled into one with a wild, delicious flood of bliss." We are not sure whether we should understand that one lip or one mate was the result of this min-gling, but either way the outcome was ingenious. The young man in the case was a physician who had been dropped out of a balloon, and the maiden was a denizen of the aboriginal city of Atzlan. Arizona cafion. Mr. McDougall's story relates the extended experience of the young physician in this peculiar place. His firearms and his surgical skill impress the inhabitants with the belief that he is a deity. He removes a cataract from the eye of a priest, shoots a cou gar and a number of human beings, and builds a grist mill. His experiences are interesting. Another balloon comes after him finally. He marries the girl. Mr. McDougall illustrates

To the minds of most of us the name "Jesuit" calls up very contradictory ideas. We taink of Francis Xavier and of the benevo-lent missionary fathers who laid down their lives for the faith, and we decide that the Jesuit is a saint. Again, we see the Jesuit intriguing, plotting, stirring up the flames of war and of the Inquisition, hated, dreaded, and hunted out of country after country; we read the arraignments of Pascal and Gioberti. and the Jesuit seems to us an emissary of the arch enemy. But the history of the formation and growth of the Jesuit order must always be of intense interest to the intelligent man, irrespective of his agreement or disagreement with the governing prinsiples of that order, and a new work, "St. Ignatius Loyola and the First Jesuita," by Stewart Rose (Catholic Publication Society Company), has the qualities to make it generally acceptable. The reader will look in vain here for any solution of the vexed questions o Jesuitism, but he will find an interesting popand other early members of the society. The solume is exceptionally handsome, and the illustrations, showing us the founder, his comons, and the scenes among which they lived, are admirable and valuable, reproduc ing, in a number of instances, monuments and buildings which no longer exist. Harper & Brothers publish "Elsa," a novel by E. McQueen Gray. The hero is an artist and an Englishman, the heroine a singer, the offspring of an Austrian father and an Italian mother. The story is full of German and Italian flavor. Its scene begins in Venice and is continued in Munich, and a little of it is laid in London. A duel with Schliger, after the German student fashion, is an incident of the tale. The nose of one of the contestants-the one who deserves punishment-is sliced clean off in this encounter. The story is easily told and is readable.

Freeland; a Social Anticipation," translated by Arthur Ranson from the German of Dr. Theodor Hertzka (D. Appleton), expresses in the form of a romance the author's idea of what it is possible to accomplish in the way of social emancipation." It is the account of a colony which establishes itself upon the table lands of east Africa, and becomes prosperous and happy through the observance of an eco omic system which the story sets forth. The underlying idea of this system is broadly conveyed in Dr. Hertzka's dictum: "If it is possible for the community to provide the capital for production without thereby doing injury to either the principle of perfect individual freedom or to that of justice, if interest can be dispensed with without introducing communistic control in its stead, then there no longer stands may positive obstacle in the way of the establishment of the free social order." The first German edition of "Freeland" appeared in 1800, and its appearance has been followed by the organization in Austria and Germany of the International Freeland Society, which includes persons belonging to all social classes. In March last it was announced that a suitable tract of land in British East Africa, between Mount Kenia and the coast, had been placed at the disposal of the society, and it was then hoped that the formation of a Freeland colony would not long be delayed. Dr. Hertzka, who is a citizen of Vienna, has long been distin-guished as an economist of the Manchester school. The heroine of his story is Miss Fox. an American, who marries one of the les in the colonization scheme. "Freeland" is a very readable and a very suggestive book. It will set the reader to thinking, and if he does not care to agree with its theories he can amuse himself by picking out such flaws as he finds they contain.

"Indika." by the Rev. Dr. John F. Hurst (Harper & Brothers), is an account of the country and the people of India and Ceylon as they exist to-day. Dr. Hurst in gathering his ma-terial visited all the large places of the empire, and many of the more obscure. His narrative is very full and very instructive. The volume is copiously illustrated.

The wonders of electricity and of the applieations which have been made of it could hardly be more strikingly suggested, and per-haps they are nowhere more lucidly and interestingly explained than in "Electricity and Magnetism," translated from the French of Amédée Guillemin, revised and edited by Silvanus P. Thompson, F. R. B. Dr. Thompson has in great part rewritten the chapters on dynamo electric machines and on the tele-phone, and otherwise through the correction of data has brought the work abreast of the times. Six hundred illustrations accompany the text.

TO THE YOUNG MEN OF THE STATE. The State League of Democratic Clubs Expects Them to Do Their Duty.

The State League of Democratic Clubs has issued this address to the people of the State, supplementing the work of the League in the campaign:

To the Young Men of the State of New York : "The State League of Democratic Clubs, the State branch of the National Association of Democratic Clubs, as an organization representative of all parts of this State and inde-pendent of all subordination to local political associations, believing that the success of the nominees of the Democratic party for State officers at the coming election is of supreme importance as bearing upon the national con-

"It is apparent that a persistent and sys-tematic effort is being made by the Republican party managers to hoodwink the people of this State, and to divert their attention from the great issues at stake which affect every citizen in the preservation of those inestimable rights of person and of property which are guaranteed to him by the Constitution to matters of mere local administration which have no real place in the present contest, and may well be left to the care of those directly interested in them, who are fully capable of attending to and guarding those interests when convinced that who are fully capable of attending to and guarding those interests when convinced that they are imperilled.

"We appeal to you, therefore, to support and vote for every candidate upon the Democratic State ticket, and not to be misled by false lights and ingenious perversions, but to feel assured that the issue of the battle now being waged in our State will tell with tremendous force in the settlement next year of the momentous question as to what principles and policy shall guide the administration of national affairs thereafter.

"From this standpoint; which seems to usto; be clearly defined, we confidently present to you the record of the Democratic party and its administration of affairs in this State as evidence that its pledges for the future will be honestly and absolutely fulfilled.

"The unparalleled credit of the State debt; its efficient and economical administration of State affairs in all the departments which have been under the control of Democratic officers; the introduction and support by Democratic members in the State Legislature of measures judiciously framed, tending to lighten the burdens of the working classes; the advocacy against united opposition on the part of Republican representatives of home rule for our municipalities; the effort to secure the passage of a just and equable excise law; the insistance upon and struggle to secure compliance with the constitutional requirement for a thorough enumeration of the inhabitants of the State, so as to assure a fair and just apportionment; the efforts, defeated by Republican votes, to keep and equable excise law; the insistance upon and struggle to secure compiliance with the constitutional requirement for a thorough enumeration of the inhabitants of the State, so as to assure a fair and just apportionment; the efforta, defeated by Bepublican votes, to keep the World's Fair within the borders of the State to which it belonged by right of the conceded supremacy of New York as the Empire State of the Union, are only a few of the many conspicuous instances in which the Democratio party has justified its claim to be the party of the people.

"Contrast with such a record the history of the administration by the Bepublican party of national affairs. Its influence and acts have been uniformly pernicious and antagonistic to popular interests, unjustifiable and onerous tariff legislation, the revolutionary Force bill, the false and fraudulent census, the arbitrary methods adopted by the Republican majority in the last Congress, its infamous procedure in unseating members fairly elected and replacing them by others as fairly defeated at the polls in order to secure a "working majority," furnish only a small part of the long catalogue of grievances which the people justiy charge to the maladministration of the great trusts mistakenly confidedto that party.

"It is not credible that the error of 1828 will be again committed by the people, but rather that the voice of rebuke, which was so universally and clearly heard in the elections of 1890, will be heard again and again, until those who have betrayed the great interests committed to them shall be hurled forever from the high places they have disgraced.

"Prompt and vigorous action alone will insure an unmistakable demonstration of popular sentiment in respect to the vital issues which confront the nation.

Do not be deceived into the belief that the result of the coming election in this state is of inferior importance, but be assured that upon interior importance, but be assured that hope of the nation for honest, able, fearless, and democratic administrat

Another Tammany War Mere.

From the National Tribune.

The New York Democracy never did a more graceful thing than when they selected Thomas. A. Conkley to be Bergeant-at-Arms of their State Committee the other day. There are few men, in the United States better known in Washington than "Tom" Coakley, who for many years has been an assistant doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, continued as such from Congress to Congress, irrespective of party. But it is not as a Democratic politician that "Tom" is an interesting character to the National Tribusa. Our interest in him is due to the fact that he was one of the fighting sailors of the way navy, and his name stands on the rostors of two of the most famous fighting ships that ever carried the old fing at the fore. One was the Cumberland, and Tom was "first side-tackleman and pikeman" on the forward gun of the starboard division" when that old ship went down in battle with the Merrimac. He was hit by splinters, but not seriously hurt, and was one of the few who escaped in the boats as the vessel was sinking. After that he made one or two uneventful cruises, and was transferred to the Kearsarge when she was making up her crew to start after the Alabama. He completed his term in the Kearsarge and was honorably discharged with high recommendations and a "good conduct" hadge in 1863. His record in the navy is second to none. Some time ago Col. Heywood, now Commandant of the Marine Corps. who was Marine Officer of the Cumberland, said to us that Tom Coakley was one of the best and bravest sailors.

READY AT II O'CLOCK TO-DAY.

The November Scribner

which is published today, appeals to all tastes. Its articles upon exploration and travel, the political, the artistic, and the practical represent the best that can be brought together.

The Wrecker, Robert Louis Stevenson's serial, reaches a critical point in the story. Illustrated.

The Naval Apprentice System, is an entertaining article, by Lieut. A. B. Wyckoff, with illustrations by R. F. Zogbaum. Explorations in the Sierra Madre is the first of a series of articles by Dr. Carl Lumholtz, author of "Among Cannibals." With 17 illustrations.

The Ocean Steamship as a Freight Carrier, by John H. Gould, completes the successful steamship series. Profusely illustrated. The Railway Across the Sahara, is an account of the proposed great undertaking by Napoléon Ney. Illustrated.

The Federation of Australia is by Hon. Alfred Deakin, M.P., of the National Australian Convention. The Picturesque Quality of Holland-Figures and Costumes, is a delightful article, by George Hitchcock, with many drawings by the author.

Octave Thanet contributes a clever story. Mr. Andrew Lang completes his "Adventures Among Books." There is an interesting article on Mr. Lowell as a Teacher. Poems by Duncan Campbell Scott, Julian Hawthorne, W. V. Moody, and the department "The Point of View."

HARPER'S MAGAZINE

FOR NOVEMBER

Opens with a strikingly original Thanksgiving story.

"The Inn of the Good Woman," written by HEZEKIAH BUTTERworth, and appropriately illustrated by W. T. SMEDLEY. CONSTANCE FENIMORE WOOLson's second paper on

"Cairo in 1890"

is, if possible, more deeply interesting even than the initial article of the series, graphically portraying the life of the Egyptian capital as it is at the present day, and being very fully illustrated from photographs and drawings by eminent artists.

The remarkable serial story, by George Du Maurier, entitled

which, with its numerous striking pictures by the same hand, has formed a strangely attractive feature of the Magazine for several months past, is brought to a conclusion. JULIAN RALPH contributes another of his sketches of the far Northwest, entitled

" Dan Dunn's Outfit," which Frederic Reminston illustrates in his own inimitable manner. The series of "Letters of Charles Dickens to Wilkie Collins," edited by LAURENCE HUTTON. comes to an end with a brief note dated Jan. 27, 1870. An appreciative paper, with portraits and illustrations, on the character and career of the famous Confederate General, is contributed by the Rev. HENRY M. FIELD, D. D. "The Treatment of Cancers

Stonewall Jackson,

and Other Tumors" is discussed in a brief popular article by Drs. B. FARQUHAR CURTIS and WILLIAM T. BULL. A paper by ARTHUR SILVA WHITE, F. R. S. E., Secretary of the Royal Scottish Geographical Society, presents some striking facts concerning the relations of Africa and the European Powers."

RUTH McENERY STUART CONtributes an amusing dialect story,

"The Widder Johnsing."

WALTER BESANT'S Series of illustrated papers on "London" is continued in an absorbingly interesting account of the life, manners and customs of the people who lived in

"The London of Good Queen Bess."

There are also Poems in this number by WILLIAM DEAN HOWELLS, AMELIE RIVES, and ELIZA CALVERT HALL.

The Editorial Departments.

GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS, in the Editor's Easy Chair, writes of the recent patriotic celebration at Bennington, and pays a touching tribute to the memory of his friend, James Russell Lowell; WILLIAM DEAN How-ELLS, in the Editor's Study. asks why we have not a national literature, and makes a proposal to foreigners to come here and produce it; and CHARLES DUDLEY WARNER OPENS the Editor's Drawer with some pleasant allusions to the "tall girl," and the tendency of the new generation toward unusual height and gracious slimness.
